Away

I cannot say, and I will not say
That he is dead,
He is just away;
With a cheery smile
And a wave of the hand.

He has wandered into an unknown land
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there.
And you—oh you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return,
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of There, as the love of Here,
Think of him still as the same, I say,
He is not dead—he is just away.

lished a sense of complacency that was weakening the national fibre. Britain, said her enemies, was decadent; fed with fat things, she had forgotten fortitude, and having forgotten, had lost it. The coming of "The Day," long looked for, long prepared for by an iron nation whose God was force, and whose religion interpreted by the craving for world dominion, was hailed with confidence by Germany, which proudly boasted the most tremendous military machine the world has ever witnessed. What hope was there for the Nation of shop-keepers, and the contemptible little army, when faced with the millions of a people whose every son was a soldier trained? The warnings of Lord Roberts and a few whose vision pierced the veil of official friendship that hid from the eyes of an unsuspecting people the shining swords and grim artillery, had been disregarded. Who should stand against the war lords of mid-Europe? Was not Sparta arrayed against Athens once more? The blood of the British breed had become as water, and victory was to be had for the taking. What though Britain stood pledged to maintain the integrity of Belgium. So too did Germany. If national pledges to her were but "scraps of paper" what likelihood of Britain, wholly unprepared, fulfilling her undertaking? And even if the national honour was placed first, what would her little army avail against the hosts of Thor? The answer came on August 4th, 1914. Britain, true to tradition, placed honour before all, and not Britain alone, but Britain overseas. Through the veins of the Rose and Thistle, the Shamrock and the Leek, wherever found, the hot blood of righteous anger surged, and within a week was launched a crusade greater than this or any generation had dreamed of. In that crusade peaceful civilians joined hand and heart with men of war. Gentle woman forgot her privileges and prerogatives, not merely content, but insistent to serve and suffer. The Empire found her soul, and it shone in the purity and the majesty of its beauty throughout the fifty months of unparalleled toil, and agony that followed. Never in the history of the Empire have more glorious pages been written, and on them are enrolled the names of old and young, of rich and poor, of the humble and the great. Yes, the Empire found her soul in 1914. God grant she may not lose it in these after years of troubled peace.

As it was with the dear old Mother Lands, the large Dominions, and the more isolated places of the earth over which the meteor flag of Britain floated proudly to the breeze, so was it with our own loved Island. Small may have been our numbers and small our influence, and yet not so. If the overlordship of the Seas is the Empire's, on the Banks of Newfoundland and around her rugged shores were the training schools which made possible the Imperial navies. To the Drakes, the Frobers, the Grenvilles, the Gilberts, the Raleighs and their gallant Devon crews, Old England owed under God her safety and her glory in the Elizabethan and Armada days. Intrepid adventurers were these, some of them remote kinsmen, some forefathers of the lads in Reserve and Regiment who, true to the motto of their fathers and the blood of their race, gave glad response to the call of King and Country,—Empire-saviours in their days as those gallant men of Devon and Dorset had been pioneer Empire builders in the days of yore.

Newfoundland is the Empire's eldest daughter overseas. Her calendar has its red-letter days as well as its days of sacred memories. Some years stand out from others, years of empire, or of fortune, good or ill. But throughout them the old British spirit has endured, that spirit of determination and of unflinching endeavour, which compels triumph because it expects it, and which is never at its best and its strongest unless at its worst and its weakest.

When on the fateful fourth of August war was declared, the hearts of our people were stirred as never before. Then seemed to be torn aside the veil between the known and the hidden. Men peered anxiously and questioning into the darkness. How trivial seemed the martial glories of the centuries! How chilling the pomp and panoply of so-called "glorious" war! All too soon was told the story of the Hun smashing his ruthless path through the peaceful fields of Belgium. Huge fortresses that had again and again bid defiance to advancing hosts, petered into dust by engines of destruction undreamed of in Napoleonic or Crimean days. The cry of the ravished land ascended and met ready response from all that was best, most chivalrous and most brave in Motherland or Brain overseas. Our own loved land, small in numbers, but large in courage, strong in faith and indomitable in purpose, heard the cry and answered. There was no disunion and little of self-seeking then. Life's lesser issues were forgotten. One great overpowering influence seemed to smother all that was base, ignoble or trifling. The young manhood of the Island, chafing at discipline's imperative delays, awaited with eagerness the hour when on flood or field theirs it should be to succour the oppressed, and as their forefathers had done throughout the centuries, fight valiantly for King and country, and for nations, despoiled and violated by an arrogant, unmoral and ambitious people who at the best of their pagan rulers were content to wade through slaughter to world dominion, and to "shut the gates of mercy on mankind."

With what willingness the youth of those earlier war years enlisted beneath the Nation's banners! What was it that impelled them? Love of country, love of justice, hatred of oppression, insistence on right, that sense of duty that can never be divorced from a quickened conscience? Undoubtedly all contributed. The spirit of adventure was also there, the spirit that has made possible the Nation's greatness. When that spirit disappears the day of decay will dawn for Homeland or for Motherland.

As the millions flocked from crowded city, from village, farm or Empire's outpost, to swell the ranks of the Army; as our own boys came from office, shop and factory, from fishing boat, no carpenter's bench, from the homes of the rich or the shingled cottages around our windswept coasts, have we not in admiration and in gratitude wondered, at the readiness of their response and the splendid purpose that inspired it? War may degrade, but it often ennobles, and the days of enlistment witnessed many a re-birth, of hope and happiness, and many an evidence of a inward greatness, of which perhaps even those most near akin had seldom dreamed. Religion finds interpretation in many ways, and one of the most convincing is that of duty recognized and duty performed. Of gallant lads such as these an American poet writes, as he contemplates the offering of the final sacrifice,—

We may not know how fared your soul before
Occasion came to try it by this test,
Perchance, it used on lofty wings to soar;
Again, it may have dwelt in lowly nest.

We do not know if bygone knightly strain
Impelled you then, or blood of humble clod
Defined the dread adventure to attain
The cross of honour or the peace of God.

We see but this, that when the moment came,
You raised on high, then drained,
The solemn cup—
The gall of death; that, touched by valor's flame,
The kindled spirit burned the body up.

Think you those happy hearted, fearless, honest lads who found their way to the recruiting rooms, on the Parade Ground, and at Pleasantville, saw no visions of the days to come? Not the most thoughtless amongst them but knew that in choosing to play a man's part, he was facing a soldier's risk; not one but counted the cost, and went forth ready to pay the price, if the account was called.

It was the flower of your youth who manned the ships, and filled the ranks. Alas that so many fell beneath the battle breezes, but no passing of the years shall rob them of their fragrance. The soul of unsullied youth, in the springtime of life, ere the hearts of summer, the blasts of autumn and the frosts of winter have shrivelled and chilled its fibre, is life's joy and inspiration.

That soul, secure in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.
The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years,
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the wars of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds.

On the legends of ancient Rome none is more eloquent than that of Mettus Curtius. The story is familiar. Jupiter, incensed, hurled a mighty thunderbolt into the city. In the Forum a great gulf was riven. Alarm was everywhere. The soothsayers were consulted and the answer came that the gulf would never close until what was best and dearest to Rome was thrown therein. A noble Roman youth, obedient to the oracle, clad in full armour, and on horseback, leaped like a centaur into the chasm declaring that Rome's citizens were her most valuable possessions. The chasm closed over his head, says the legend, and Rome was saved. The story of Mettus Curtius, (Continued on Page 4.)

It has been said that amid the horrors and the heroism of the years of War the Nation found her soul. It by this is implied that throughout these years all that was best and noblest in the national character was given expression in selflessness and service the saying is true. The Lure of Gold Or The Heart Of A Woman

CHAPTER XXX.

Explanation.

Reuben or "Digger Jack," as Lord Cravenden thought of him, was also on his way back to the old country, and, in fact, landed but a few weeks after the arrival of Sir Edwin and his daughter.

He looked a different being from the youth who had left England but a twelve month ago. Then he was a struggling vagrant, today he was a rich man, for the gold from the "Olive Mine," as he mentally termed it, seemed inexhaustible, and he had left his mates in high feather. Jem had elected to look after Reuben's interests during his absence, and as he knew he had only to write to Lady Cravenden in regard to her son's share, Reuben felt fairly comfortable.

Back again in the metropolis, as he came out of the great railway terminus, with its life and bewildering bustle, he stood on the pavement, wondering which way to turn for the best. His first thought was to find out old Wynter, his grandfather.

"I feel more lost here than in the bush," he said to himself, as the busy denizens of London pushed and jostled him. "It's like an unknown country."

He turned sharply, and, as he did so, he came into collision with a little girl, who gave a cry of dismay, as a bottle which she had been carrying most carefully broke into pieces on the ground, and the liquid was spilled.

"Hallo!" he cried; "have I hurt you?"

"No, sir," she replied; "but you've spilt the brandy and she'll die now."

"Who will die?" asked Reuben.

"The pretty lady—our lodger. Mother says she won't never get over this, and I was to get some brandy quick, and now—"

Reuben put his hand to his flask; he knew it was full, for oftentimes it is the traveler's only friend.

"I have brandy here," he said quietly. "Do you live far away?"

"No, sir," said the child; "only in the next street."

"Well, I'll come back with you, if you like, that will save time in getting another bottle, won't it?" Plunging his hand into his pocket, he took out some coins and gave them to the girl; one of them was a half crown, and she held it up with an incredulous look of delight that pierced Reuben's heart.

"May I keep it?" she said. "All this?"

"Yes, of course, child," was the answer. "Come, let us hurry. What is your lodger's name?" he asked, as they hurried down a grimy street.

"Polly, sir; at least, that's what mother calls her—Polly Hansoon."

He started at the sound of the familiar name, as he thought of Polly Styles.

The child stopped at one of the tenement houses, and beckoned Reuben to follow her.

"You'll come up, sir, won't you?" she said. "Mother's gone back to work again."

Reuben was about to refuse, and had already pulled out the flask to give the child, when a mysterious impulse seemed to bid him ascend his little guide.

"You go in," she whispered. "I'll go and get some more water."

He entered slowly, and moved as softly to the side of the bed. In the fast-fading twilight he could only dimly see a woman's figure, tossing restlessly.

"Can I do anything?" he asked,

bending over her.

At the sound of his voice, the sick woman opened her eyes, as if in fear.

"Who is that; who are you?" she cried.

"I am a stranger, but I may be able to help you," said Reuben.

But the woman, with a cry, shrank back away from him; and at that moment the girl returned with a light.

"Go away," moaned the sick woman, and at her voice a thrill passed through him. He brought the light nearer, and, as he raised it, she tried to put her hands before her face, but it was too late.

"Polly!" cried Reuben.

"Oh, why don't you go?" she sobbed piteously.

"Hush, hush!" he whispered soothingly, as if she were a child. "Don't cry, Polly. Tank Heaven I have found you! You are quite safe now."

She turned her eyes on him with despair.

"Too late!" she moaned. "I am dying, Reuben."

Headache

Recurring headaches usually come from an exhaustion of the nervous system, and they do not disappear until the vigor of the nerve cells is restored by such up-building treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Temporary relief by use of powders is often obtained at an enormous expense to the nervous system and the general health.

Get the nerves right and the headaches will not return.

Mrs. W. J. Pearse, Nunn St., Cobourg, Ont., writes:

"My system became run-down and I suffered greatly with pain in my head. This was so severe that I would have to bind a cloth tightly about my head so that I could get my work done. A friend advised the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after taking the first box I found quite an improvement in my condition. I continued using them until I had taken about seven boxes, and they strengthened and built up my system splendidly, completely relieving the pain in my head."

MODEL FARM IS ELECTRIFIED

STOCKHOLM, May 1.—The Swedish government has been requested to establish a model electrified farm, to be located, if possible, near Stockholm.

In view of the fact that more than one-third of agricultural Sweden is now electrified, it is proposed that the model farm be as nearly 100 per cent electrically operated as possible so that Swedish farmers, who are now in a position to change horses for electric power, may be enabled to view demonstrations of how "white coal" can be utilized in the country.

The request for the electrified model farm comes from the National Association for Electrification of Rural Sweden. In its communication to the government this body points out the necessity for training Swedish farmers in making use of electrical power. It proposes that farm electrification be made a special subject of study at the Agricultural schools and colleges of the country.

It is proposed that the model farm be fully equipped with all the latest electric agricultural devices, so that the farmers may see electrically operated plows, harrows, seeders, harvesters and threshing machines. Motors of different sizes will drive the milk separators and the churn. The new electric device which passes an electric current through an ensilage of cattle fodder to increase its nutritive value is to be shown.

There is very little heavy labor on Swedish farms, heretofore performed by man or beast, which machines operated by electric current cannot do, and more than a third of the Swedish farmers can operate their farms by electricity if they understand the elementary principles of electrical science. Naturally, the agricultural population needs considerable training before full advantage can be taken of the wonderfully cheap power furnished by the many waterfalls and rapids which have of late been harnessed.

"A Hanging A Day."

(Chicago Tribune)

A proposal to hang a murderer each day in the year would horrify most of us. Opponents of capital punishment would denounce it as an atrocity. The average man and woman would flinch from it at first as a gruesome thought. Yet, is a hanging a day worse than a murder a day? Do we cry out against that gruesome toll? We average a killing a day. Why not a corresponding rate of punishment? If there were a hanging a day, there would soon be a drop in the murder rate. Of course murders in the first degree do not run as high as one a day. In 1919 the number reported was 154. Homicides were 194. That is more than a killing a day. But with the death penalty confined to murders of the first degree, we should need a hanging every two days, excluding Sundays. If punishment kept pace with the crime. The year 1919, in which there were 154 murders, there were three hangings and only twenty-seven sentences to the penitentiary. Ten murderers committed suicide, so that leaves 114 unaccounted for.

Business Administration Of The Railways

(L'Evenement)

In order that the Transcontinental Railway may fulfil the intentions of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and justify its existence it must be freed from those influences which are anxious to bring about its collapse. The management of the line ought to be entrusted to business men who have had an unquestioned interest to see the system become profitable. Such men are to be found in Quebec, where they have support of all public organizations. We are convinced that under an independent administration the Transcontinental would wipe out its deficits that are now the rule every year. It would not be hard matter to convince the western farmers that it would be advantageous for them as well as for ourselves to ship their produce from Winnipeg to Quebec, and thence to Liverpool, and in order to convince them the cost of hauling might be reduced.

CONSTITUTION FOR EGYPTIANS

CAIRO, May.—The framings of a Dustour (constitution) for Egypt made necessary by the lifting of the British protectorate has become the paramount feature of Egyptian politics.

The question, as to who shall frame the Dustour, which has been under discussion in the native press ever since the first royal levee was held by King Fuad at Abdin Palace, has divided the country politically into two diametrically opposed camps.

The Nationalists who are mostly adherents of Zaghloul Pasha have been demanding that the constitution be drawn up by a National Assembly elected by the people. The Ministerialists who are supporting the government of Premier Sarwat Pasha and who have just won the day, have been in favor of appointing a special commission for the task.

The commission already appointed is composed of 31 members under the presidency of Rushdy Pasha, former Prime Minister. It is to draw up within four months a project for a constitution which will be thrashed out by the Egyptian parliament, which will have the right to amend it except that which concerns the prerogatives of the throne.

The government's project calls for a parliament to consist of two chambers. All the members of the lower house and half the senate are to be elected by popular vote; the other half of the senate to be appointed by the executive.

The newspaper Liberty points out that the senate, being partly appointive, "will be able to check all the whims of the majority of the Nationalist representatives."

LOST THROUGH LABOR DISPUTES

LONDON, May.—It is estimated that 3,500,000 working days were lost in Great Britain in March owing to labor disputes involving 250,000 workers. The principal disputes being in the engineering and shipbuilding industries.

Unemployment in March, though still bad, showed a further slight improvement despite the adverse effect of the Engineering dispute, says the Labor Gazette which publishes the estimate above.

Among industries showing improvement were iron, mining, pig iron manufacture, the building trades, the cotton and wool textile industries and the clothing trades.

Changes in rates of wages reported as having taken effect in March resulted in a reduction of over £225,000 in the weekly full time wages of about 1,350,000 workers and an increase of £800 weekly in the wages of about 6,000 others.

Coal miners in Northumberland, Yorkshire, North Staffordshire, north Wales and Scotland sustained reductions varying from under two per cent. to over eight per cent., the paper states.

CAUGHT THE CURATE

The bachelors of a certain town are greatly scared by the advent of a curate of a few home type of no desperate husband-hunting spinster.

After throwing each of the local bachelors into spasms of terror lest he should be the recipient of her attentions, she managed to capture the curate.

Local bachelordom was so relieved at its escape that it united in presenting the curate with a wedding present in the shape of a costly dinner service. The curate was overwhelmed.

"Such a magnificent service," he gasped.

"Well, you see, my boy," explained the chief of the local bachelors, "it is really a thanksgiving service."

Irish Make Agreement re Elections Now

DUBLIN, May 21.—An agreement, making possible the holding of the Irish elections in June and the negotiation of a coalition cabinet, was reached Saturday by leaders of the two political factions in Southern Ireland, and was unanimously approved by their respective followers in Dublin. A coalition panel will be presented to the electors and the latter will be free to say whether or not they accept the Anglo-Irish treaty. An effort will be made to have both sides returned in respective strength in Dublin, and where there is no contest there will be a recommendation that the sitting member be returned, but no definite arrangement is made because the labor party may nominate candidates.

Writes At 101

PARIS, May.—M. Saille Saint-Prix, the oldest working journalist in France and probably in the world, 101 years old, contributes an article of a column to a column and a half every week to the Abbeille de Seine-et-Oise, a French provincial newspaper. M. Saille Saint-Prix told a correspondent who called on him at his chateau about an hour's journey from Paris, that his great regret is that he can no longer go shooting, which he had to abandon at the young age of ninety.

THE TOUR OF A SMILE

My papa smiled this morning when He came down stairs, you see, At mamma; and when he smiled, then She turned and smiled at me. And when she smiled at me, I went And smiled at Mary Ann. Out in the kitchen; and she lent It to a hired man.

So then he smiled at someone whom He saw when going by, Who also smiled and ere he knew Had twinkles in his eye; So he went to his office then And smiled right at his clerk, Who put some more ink on his pen And smiled back from his work.

So when his clerk went home, he smiled Right at his wife, and she smiled over at their little child As happy as could be; And then their little child she took The smile to school; and, when She smiled at teacher from her book, Teacher smiled back again.

And then the teacher passed one on To little James McBride, Who couldn't get his lesson done No matter how he tried; And James took it home and told How teacher smiled at him, When he was tired and didn't scold But said: "Don't worry, Jim."

And, When I happened to be there That very night at play, His mother had a smile to spare Which came across my way; And then I took it after a while Back home and mamma said: "Here is that very self-same smile Come back with us to bed."

G. P. O. Doing Great Work

The manner in which the General Post Office and the Minister of Posts have risen to the problem of getting mails in and out and around the country is being viewed with admiration by all concerned.

The fact that now, and even since the railway crisis set in, there has been no accumulation of mail in the post office, any more than in normal times, is very creditable to the authorities responsible.

The fact that the achievement has not cost more, but less than ordinarily, is also one upon which all can feel happy.

C. L. B. Cadets Has Big Parade

FULL BATTALION AND BAND ATTENDED DIVINE SERVICE ST. THOMAS'S

The Church Lads' Brigade Cadets with the Old Comrades Association and Battalion Band held a most successful Church Parade yesterday, when they attended Divine Service at the Old Garrison Church of St. Thomas, at 11 o'clock.

The parade was over 400 strong and presented an imposing sight as it wended its way towards the Church, via Harvey and Military Roads to the strains of inspiring music rendered by the band under Capt. A. Morris.

In the absence of L.-Col. R. F. Goodridge who, attended by Capt. H. Outerbridge, was participating in the Memorial Service at Gower Street Church, the parade was in command of Major and Adj. R. H. Tait, M.C.

At St. Thomas's the preacher was the Rector, Rev. E. C. Earp, who took for the topic of his discourse "Christianity and Industry."

The sermon was peculiarly applicable to our present day problems and difficulties, the lesson taught by it being that the only solution for such problems as this and other countries are confronted with to-day is industry, such industry as is indicated in the divine teachings.

All must work together, said the preacher, in effect, towards a common end. Dissensions were merely stumbling blocks to national progress.

After the service, the parade again returned to their Headquarters via: Military and Harvey Roads.

St. Clare's Hospital Is Opened

Yesterday morning the Institution formerly known as St. Clare's Home for working girls was opened as a hospital and will in future be known as St. Clare's Hospital. The ceremony was a private and informal one, there being present only the Mothers General of the Presentation and Mercy Orders, Superiors of the City Convents and the Suprior and Community of the new hospital.

Mass was celebrated by His Grace the Archbishop who in a brief address spoke of the work they were about to inaugurate. He said they were beginning this undertaking with a religious ceremony because it was the spirit of the Church to begin all her works of moment by the invocation of the Divine Blessing. His Grace went on to say that they had long had in view to open a hospital under the direction of the Sisters of Mercy and it was only now that the idea could be worked out.

Pressure on our space prevents us to-day from giving a full description of the new hospital, but this will appear in a day or so.
